

VICTORIAN EDUCATION (pag.307)

Exercise 1

I think that everything can be exciting and especially learning. Probably a different way to study can be exciting. For example having the possibility to tell the personal opinion and discuss about something could be interest.

Exercise 2

During the first part of Queen Victorian's reign, only the rich and the aristocrats were able to send their sons to exclusive private schools the boys were sent to famous private schools which were very sever. The girls were educated at home either by their parents or by governesses and learnt how to become goodwives and mothers, also social graces such as playing a musical instrument, drawing, embroidery and how to write a letter with good handwriting.

Many schools were quite grim places, often with windows high up so that children could not see out. They were drab by modern standards, with very little on the walls except perhaps a stern text. Boys and girls generally were separated, having their own entrance and playground.