

Chapter 5

MORE...

Now ran out the partners who Mr Jones had at work.

Mr Jones, 'cause he had lots of companies, had lots of partners too. He had about 90 partners. His nearer partners were a few. They were Jack Greenhill, Mark Humpton and Frank Brown.

Mr Crawford had just finished to interrogate Frank Brown, when Mark Humpton, the last partner who must have been to questioned, entered in his room. After the pleasantries, mr Crawford got to the point.

- Mr Humpton, did you have a good relationship?
- Yes, we did. We weren't friends, but we had a good relationship of work.
- In what way?
- Well, Mr Humpton esteemed me and others two of his partners...
- Why did he esteem you?
- Because I'm a good businessman, and I'm very experienced to manage the enterprises.
- Did he ever tell you about his estate?
- Yes, he did...He told me, Jack Greenhill and Frank Brown that he wants...actually...holy mackerel!It still seen me that he isn't dead!
- Continue, please.
- Oh, ok..What was I saying? Oh, yes.. he told us that he wanted to give us his estate.
- Uhm...so, did he tell you this?
- Yes, exactly. But he told us that we didn't tell this to anybody too...
- Ok...and do you think that he didn't leave anything for his relatives?
- I don't know...but I know...Everybody know that Mr Jones and his family weren't in a good relationship.
- Could you tell me what do you know about Mr Jones's nephew, Thomas Ring?
- Well, I didn't know him well...I didn't see him for a lot of time...But I came to know that...
- What?
- That Mr Ring wastes his money in poker...
- Uhm...and who did you tell you this?
- It's a hearsay... it is only an assumption, but is almost certain.
- ...Ok...That's all for now...Ah, only one thing...did you notice anything of strange in workers? Strange behaviours? I know it's an unusual question, but there could always be a crazy...

- No, I didn't.
- Ok...so, we've finished. Goodbye mr Humpton.
- Goodbye.
