

Chapter 6

THEORIES

Now, Mr Crawford had just finished the questioning.

The questions were always the same: who is the murder? Why did he (or she, but in this case was not much probable) kill Mr Jones? Are there any accomplices?

The questioning of the partners of Mr Jones was been interesting: especially Mr Humpton's one. Mr Crawford could know more about the relationship between the victim and his nephew, and this could have been the heart of the mystery.

If the killer were been a worker, there were been lots of possibilities... but if the killer were been 'cause of Mr Jones's estate the possibilities were been two:

1. the killer was one of the partners of the victim who Mr Jones promised his estate, and they would have had it as soon as possible.
2. the killer was Mr Ring and the reason could have been two:
 - he was sure that his uncle would have given his estate to him, and he would have had his money as soon as possible;
 - after he discovered that Mr Jones would have given his estate to his partners, he would have become crazy and would have killed him.

He was still thinking at this mystery when the phone rang.

Mr Crawford answered at the phone call and a male voice started to talk. It belongs to a policeman.

Mr Crawford had just arrived at the police station. He climbed hurriedly the stairs and entered in the room when he had been waiting. He saw him. The murderer.
